

ARTIST AMY SHERALD TO JOIN BOARD OF THE BALTIMORE MUSEUM OF ART

Museum Names Obama-Selected Portrait Artist as New Trustee

BALTIMORE, MD (January 16, 2018)—Today the Baltimore Museum of Art (BMA) announced that it has named celebrated contemporary artist and Baltimore resident Amy Sherald as a new trustee on the Museum's board. Sherald will officially take her board seat on February 20, joining Board Chair Clair Zamoiski Segal and Dorothy Wagner Wallis Director Christopher Bedford, as well as 39 other active trustees guiding the institution. This diverse group is comprised of regional and national leaders in art, philanthropy, and business, including another recently named artist trustee, Adam Pendleton, who joined the board last August.

"As we develop a new strategic plan, it is important to have the voice of artists like Amy on the BMA's Board of Trustees," said Christopher Bedford. "Amy will bring a unique perspective to museum leadership, one that not only draws on her career as one of today's most important artists, but also on her ties to the city of Baltimore itself."

"The entire board was extremely enthusiastic about having Amy Sherald join us," said Clair Zamoiski Segal. "We look forward to gaining her insights as an artist and Baltimore resident as we map the future of this great museum."

Sherald was most recently commissioned by the National Portrait Gallery to paint Michelle Obama's portrait. She exclusively paints portraits of African Americans in her signature style, which places each subject against a monochrome background, rendering the figure in grisaille that contrasts it against strikingly bright outfits. She has been the subject of several solo exhibitions in the U.S., and her paintings have been featured in numerous group exhibitions presented nationally and internationally.

"I am thrilled to be joining the board of such an important civic institution like The Baltimore Museum of Art," said Amy Sherald. "The BMA is pioneering the way for institutions to become more inclusive by championing contemporary artists from all walks of life. I am honored to be able to have a voice in helping move the museum forward."
